

More individualism is required in public transit. Americans have been acclimatized to a high standard of living. They must be provided with a semblance of privacy and afforded an environment that compares favorably with a personal auto.